

BBC journalist faces question time at school

Journalist Hugh Pym delivered words of advice to Francis Holland School sixth-form students on Monday.

The BBC chief economics correspondent took time out of his busy schedule to be quizzed by students from the independent girl's school in Ivor Place, Regents Park.

Mr Pym, who is a renowned financial and political journalist, was at the school as part of a weekly lecture programme and provided career advice to pupils interested in journalism and discussed topical issues relating to media ethics.

Headteacher Vivienne Durham said: "Hugh Pym provided inspiration to our sixth form pupils, a number of whom happen to be aspiring writers and journalists.

"His insight into the complex world of broadcasting and the media was incredibly valuable and we are very grateful to him for making the time to visit Francis Holland."

■ Hugh Pym with Francis Holland sixth form students Picture: Polly Hancock