DEAR Fortnight – Question Challenge

Book : The School For Good and Evil: Book 1

Question: If all the Characters were in a hot air balloon and you had to throw one out who would it be?

I would most certainly throw out Tedros because over the course of reading this book I found him incredibly irritating because he was very full of himself and incredibly tiresome.

   In the book he is constantly described as good-looking, handsome, blonde, blue eyed and the descriptions of him are based so much on his physical appearance which annoys me very much. I kept coming across sentences like, "The crisp wind whipped back his golden hair and his eyes glistened in the sun" or sentences like "His cheekbones were beautifully defined and he was very handsome" etc. There were little to no clues about Tedros' personality but when I came to my conclusions with the clues I did have, I was not fond of Tedros' personality. I think its very important to be a wholesome person and while how you present yourself (in other words how you look) is important, its important to have characteristics like, kindness, generosity, goodwill, valiance, bravery, helpfulness that I did not see in Tedros. I found the constant mention of his looks quite repetitive; in an annoying way.

   Another reason why I would throw Tedros out is because he gets so much attention from other people because of things like his looks or his status (because he is a prince) hence, he has developed a bit of an ego and is quite arrogant and unnecessarily stubborn. I really don't like the fact he gets attention for his status and his physical appearance because he actually has very little control over the particular aspects of his life, so I think he is one of the characters that has a lot of attention for no known reason.

This is why I would, without hesitation, enthusiastically throw Tedros off a hot air balloon.